MONSTER MERGER

"Through food, chemicals and drugs this malignant tumour of a company seeks to control and pervert our genetic code. The invasion of the gene snatchers has begun". Corporate Watch

In their quest to control the world (literally) Monsanto have agreed to merge with pharmaceuticals group American Home Products (AHP). The deal is the sixth largest in American corporate history. With a market value of $96 billion, they now command majority control of the life-sciences industry, from maize seed gene patents to genetically mutated soya. Dubbed the, 'Microsoft of bio-technology,' Monsanto run the world's largest agricultural research and development body, with their main man Robert Shapiro being described as a 'deal a day man',

NAMING NAMES SHOCK

Monsanto are now embarking on an open discussion campaign in an effort to appear 'consumer friendly'. They have already been slagging anti-Gen groups in adverts and on billboards across Europe, now in an attempt to persuade us that they have nothing to hide they have taken out ads in the 'liberal' press. Here are some excerpts from a press release published in last Sunday's Observer:

"Genetically modified food is the subject of much heated debate. As a biotechnology company, we firmly believe in it. Of course, we're a business and aim for our shareholders to profit from this technology... our excitement and commitment to food biotechnology stems from the real benefits it provides for both consumers and the environment.

There are others with less supportive views. Some are openly hostile. It is only fair that you appreciate the spectrum of opinions before making an informed decision. We're about to run an advertising campaign...As well as our views, we will be publishing the addresses and phone numbers of those with different views, including some of our most vocal critics, encouraging you to contact them. This may sound unusual, but we believe that food is so fundamentally important everyone should know all they want to about it.

Besides the advertising, there are leaflets in many supermarkets and you can call us free on 0800 092 0401 if you have any questions or would like further literature". (SchNews warns all readers NOT to continuously use this freephone number and then leave the receiver off the hook, they only have four operators and you would cost Monsanto a lot of money).

The press release then goes on to say; "The world grows its food at great cost to the environment. Insecticides, fertilizers and herbicides used in agriculture require scarce resources processed in eco-taxing industrial plants. We believe plant biotechnology can limit industrial and chemical impact on the earth. For instance, we have developed crops that are insect resistant, in some cases eliminating the need to apply insecticides altogether. (We also want you to know that we produce the world's top selling herbicide, Roundup)." The release ends- MONSANTO Food.Health.Hope

SchNEWS, like Monsanto, believe in providing 'information for action', so to save you waiting for their advertising, here are the numbers we think they should be printing, (probably).

"The opportunity is just enormous, we see the value that we can create as several billion dollars". Monsanto's president.

A fortnight ago, consultants acting for Monsanto, wrote to some of Africa's most prominent academics and politicians, inviting them to sign a stirring public statement called "Let the Harvest Begin". It went on to say "Many of our needs have an ally in biotechnology and the promising advances it offers for our future, with these advances, we prosper; without them, we cannot thrive. Slowing its acceptance is a luxury our hungry world cannot afford."

While some responded with outrage, others signed up. Monsanto's name appears in such small print readers could think that the statement is from the the signatories, rather than Monsanto. Monsanto's suggestion that the continent's freedom from famine depends upon it would be hilarious, were it not so sinister. Monsanto's operations can now be numbered among the continent's greatest threats.

The leading edge of Monsanto's new work is not the production of food, but the production of feed: crops, in other words, grown not for humans but for animals. Last month, the company announced a joint venture with the gigantic multinational grain merchant Cargill, to produce and market the seeds of genetically engineered fodder plants, particularly maize. Feed production is a growing component of Third World agriculture, supplying the ever-increasing consumption of meat, eggs and dairy produce in the First World. Growing animal fodder for McCrap food is also one of the reasons for African famine, as land previously used to grow food for local people has been 'acquired' to supply the rich world's luxuries. Much of Africa's most fertile territory is ideal for growing the new, more profitable strains of maize fodder being developed by Cargill and Monsanto.

But this is the least of the ways in which Monsanto threatens Africa. Three months ago, America's Delta and Pine Land Company patented a gene called "Terminator", which ensures that the plants which contain it produce only sterile seeds.: Farmers planting these crops, in other words, will be forced to buy new stock every year. The new technology's "primary targets", are, according to the original patent holders, "Second and Third World" countries. Four weeks ago, Monsanto bought the company. If it succeeds in inserting the Terminator into its seed varieties, farmers will be presented with little choice but to buy its non-reproducing seed, Monsanto, in other words, threatens to become the hunger merchant of the third millennium.

Where they go, famine will follow.

RECLAIM THE STREETS

Report backs from North and South London BRIXTON An orange flare signalled to the gathered 1000's the start of another successful 'avin-it' historic street party. Having turned up in relatively small force 'The Old Bill' seemed content to stand back and let it happen. Perhaps this had something to do with the sensitive nature of the locale!

Although the main police CCTV had been skillfully covered-up, by an activist shimmying up a 60-80foot pole and placing a plastic bag over it The CCTV unit on McMUCK'S frenetically swivelled around filming anything it could. McMoney were also forced to shut their toilets as the celebrants took the piss big stylee. For hours a largish swathe of Brixton's streets were given over to fun, jollity and car free space as the RTS red, black and green 'flag' on top of McMURDER fluttered in the cooling breeze, making their (McMuck's) Union Jack look grey tattered and from a bygone age. Of course the usual PC Plod 'snatch-squad' lurking about in Brixton tube station made a determined effort to ruin someones day by arresting people getting on the trains to go home.

Meanwhile a concurrent NORTH LONDON street party was in full swing in Tottenham, closing down every single road junction at some point during the day, between Euston and Seven Sisters as 2,000 made their way to the party. Euston tube was closed, so 1,500 people left for Kings Cross and a pig was overheard saying "We're doomed!" ha ha ha. Greater London Radio advised people not to enter north-east London as the Reclaim the Streets movement had taken control of it!!! 5,000 people well and truly reclaimed Tottenham High Road to the tunes of 3 soundsystems which entered and left the party without being pulled. Critical Mass cyclists initially took the site whilst partygoers following multi-coloured flags came forth in their thousands to celebrate the reclamation of what is rightfully theirs, "Freedom is there for the taking...so lets take it!" Local people joyfully joined in the festivities as the high road was taken over with music, laughter, performance, football and kids playing. Local residents said, "I saw this van pull up with lots of people running after it...the next thing we knew they had blocked the road, started playing music and thousands of people started arriving!" Another said "It's great! When we came out of the tube and saw all these people we were completely entranced...I think it's fantastic!" At the end of the day two cars used for barricades were set alight and the police baton charged the remaining people making 11 arrests for public order offences. The police were totally out-witted all day. PS. Thanks to the intelligent bods who erected toilets over the drains and the litterpickers. Nicely done!!

Hunt SchNEWS

Three sabs wrongly fingered for damaging Hursley Hambleton Hunters' cars in Dec '97 are now subject to pressure to remand them.

In retaliation Ashford sabs have been hassling the police to prosecute members of Ashford Valley Hunt after evidence of a vicious assault on one of their number has been ignored. Neil McIvor was held down and beaten with an iron bar while a hunts woman took photographs (!). He identified his attackers and several present gave statements, but no-one was questioned or arrested. Neil has been told that this case has been dropped due to lack of evidence and he is due in court accused of attacking the Hunt Master who sustained no injuries and has no witnesses! Another member was ambushed by hunters, who smashed his car up, police arrested him for cruelty to a horse on the word of a hunter. You can contact Ashford sabs on 01233 620985.

SENSIBLE JURY RULING SHOCK

Colin Davies of Stockport who fell 60ft from a bridge in 1994 and now smokes to relieve pain after conventional painkillers saw him hospitalised, was last week cleared of cultivating cannabis in just 40 minutes. The 8-woman 4-man jury "thinks the law is an ass" according to Matthew Atha of the Independent Drugs Monitoring Unit, called as a witness by self-representing Davies. Following the verdict, Davies asked if he could have his 18 cannabis plants back. Meanwhile thousands of scientists, writers, former Heads of State, judges, former DS officers etc. have signed a letter to the UN denouncing the current war on drugs and calling for a policy reappraisal and stating "we believe that the global war on drugs is now causing more harm than drug abuse itself".

OUTSIDE SchNEWS

Lastly, some good news. Ten sabs convicted of aggravated trespass because they interrupted a hunt, achieved a landmark decision, during a High Court appeal, in having recognised that since the hunt was illegally on a railway line at the time, it had itself committed an offence. Unfortunately, convictions were upheld on the facts, but their case established that if a hunt is on local authority land when it is disrupted, no offence exists, a fact often ignored by the lower courts.

In an outburst that said more about the decline of royal genetic mutation, one product of hundreds of years of selective breeding this week attacked the selective breeders of the future. Bony Prince Charlie, spawner of the tragic princes explains to us why genetics is bad. The man who would be King says that genetic engineering "takes mankind into realms that belong to God and to God alone... Apart from certain highly beneficial and specific medical applications, do we have the right to experiment with and commercialise the building blocks of life? We live in an age of rights - and it seems to me that it is time that our Creator had some rights too." In the article for The Daily Telegraph, he continues: "We simply do not know the long-term consequences for human health and the wider environment of releasing plants bred in this way... The lesson of BSE and other entirely man-made disasters on the road to 'cheap food' is surely that it is the unforeseen consequences which present the greatest cause for concern. Even the best science cannot predict the unpredictable."
